

ass stants will be John Cul-

d. rs.
in ll.
rs.
ill
ld
ch.
rs
on

Face

Of

Maine

In every village, town and city there are faces in all walks of life which stand out; faces which are widely known; faces which mirror the face of Maine.

Today's face: M. Gardner Morrill, Gray, business man. (Leavitt Photo)

To any stranger, a chance meeting with Matthew G. Morrill would probably leave no deep impression, but as Gray folk will tell you, appearances are deceiving.

For Matthew G. Morrill—he's named for his grandfather, a well known state senator, is a person to be reckoned with in the business life of the community.

Gardner, by which most people hail him, keeps busy as a forester and lumberman and is sometimes proprietor of a saw mill on the West Gray Road.

He's a firm believer in the selective cutting of his trees to assure abundancy in the years to come.

One of his chief non-business interests is the Gray Cemetery Association. A trustee, he is right now seeking a site for a new burying ground.

Gardner and his wife live in the brick house immediately back of the soldier's monument in Gray Square. They have a daughter, Mrs. Paul Durgin, of Gray, and four grandchildren.

Matthew Gardner
Morrill

Great Grampa Morrill
Matthew Gardner Morrill